Economic development projects will help spur rebound after unprecedented crisis

Though we are currently in difficult times, I know that Alabama will get through this crisis. Before the coronavirus outbreak, our economy was prospering like never before. I'm confident that Alabama will soon be on the road to recovery and that economic growth will resume across the state.

One reason for this optimism is the continued high performance of Alabama's economic development team. Their efforts over the past few years have laid a solid foundation for business expansion in the state. Last year was no different, as illustrated by the results outlined in the New & Expanding Industry Report, issued today by the Alabama Department of Commerce.

In 2019, economic development projects brought over $7.1 billion in new capital investment to Alabama, one of the highest totals ever recorded for the state. The projects included commitments for 13,454 new jobs in a wide range of industries across the state.

Having served as the assistant director of the Alabama Development Office (now Commerce), I understand the vital importance of this work in spurring future growth. Economic development has been, and will remain, a central pillar of my administration. This report assures me, when these dark days pass, we will be positioned to recover our momentum.

Alabama's economic development team plants seeds to sprout future growth

Greg Canfield, secretary of the Alabama Department of Commerce, shows off an acorn to Byungjin Jin, president and CEO of Hyundai Alabama, in a meeting before the automaker announced a $410 million expansion in Montgomery. The expansion was codenamed "Project Acorn." (Image: Alabama Governor's Office/Hal Yeager)

Last November, Alabama's economic development team wrapped up what we had codenamed "Project Acorn." It was a major coup: Automaker Hyundai planned to invest $410 million to expand its production lineup at its Montgomery assembly plant, creating 200 jobs in the process. Better still, this expansion was poised to set the stage for future growth at the Alabama facility.

Hence, "Project Acorn." I like the symbolism even more today than I did on the sunny fall afternoon that the project was announced on the steps of the Alabama Capitol.

For me, the idea of future growth sprouting from the seeds we recently planted pertains to all of the efforts of Alabama's economic development team in 2019. In the midst of the coronavirus crisis that dawned in 2020, it's easy to lose sight of this fact.

Make no mistake, the COVID-19 outbreak has placed tremendous strains on Alabama's economy and on the ability of a great many Alabamians to earn a living. These are challenging times, true. But I believe that there is recovery on the other side of this crisis.

The 2019 New & Expanding Industry Report, issued today by the Alabama Department of Commerce, captures the scope of economic development activity recorded across the state last year. The $7 billion-plus in new capital investment tied to these Alabama projects will likely be a major catalyst in our rebound.

Altogether, there were over 320 projects in 2019, generating 13,454 job commitments throughout the state, from urban areas to rural locations.

I'm proud of the work that Alabama's economic development team has accomplished, and I look forward to the economic recovery that will spring forth from these seeds we have planted across our Great State.
